Asia Credit Strategy | Asia Pacific

What's Going on in Asia Credit

What's Going on in Asia Credit (WGOIAC) is our weekly publication that highlights the key themes in Asia credit. Our WGOIAC publication includes detailed returns calculations for Asia credit, relative value sector performance, technicals and valuation tools.

Our global credit team updated our view this week, given the improved sentiment in global risk. In US credit, we believe that the rally that began in early July is largely done. We think that decelerating growth and much slower earnings growth will eventually get markets much more focused on tightening liquidity conditions again. Crossing the Atlantic, we remain reluctant to add risk in European credit. However, we think that the recent turn of events points to a tactical alignment of macro and micro factors that is better than we envisaged. We therefore see a higher chance that spreads consolidate in a tighter range in the short term. On EM USD sovereign credit, we turned neutral from a bearish view as we see: 1) Trade risk on hold or in the price; 2) EM funds defensively positioned going into September; and 3) A strong EM policy response reducing idiosyncratic risk.

Lastly, we haven't changed our bearish view on Asia credit since we updated it earlier this month. We think technicals remain weak and valuation is at best fair. Although we see some loosening in credit conditions in China, we still think that credit growth will remain rational, especially in the banking system, which drives c.75% of all credit growth in China. In addition, the recent equity correction in the non-bank sector in India shows that liquidity is tight. We continue to expect funding costs to rise while waiting for a response from the central bank/government (see It's All About Confidence and This is not 2013). Putting it all together, we continue to see a divergence in credit quality and increased dispersion in Asia credit, which means we stay defensive.

Asia Credit Strategy, Not Yet Time to Be Long Asia Credit

We try to tackle a few key themes in our Asia credit back-to-school report: 1) Three myths on China's defensive easing; 2) Signposts we are monitoring for tail risk in China credit; 3) Not only about China; we expect volatility to pick up globally; and 4) An update on our How to Beat the Market framework.

China Economics, Strategy, and Sectors – Impact of Rising Credit Risks

China's corporate bond defaults could rise amid a reduction in non-standard financing, but remain idiosyncratic rather than systemic. Policy-makers could fine-tune to ensure a milder pace of credit tightening. We prefer China's A-shares (vs. offshore) and IG bonds (vs. HY).

Due to the nature of the fixed income market, issuers or bonds of issuers recommended or discussed in this report may not be continuously followed. Investors must regard this report as providing stand-alone analysis and should not expect continuing analysis or additional reports relating to such issuers or bonds of the issuers.
